

PEAR

Engaging young people to learn, to dream, and to thrive!

PEAR is a joint venture of Harvard University and McLean Hospital partnering with school departments, cultural institutions and youth-serving organizations. Dedicated to improving the lives of young people, PEAR combines the wisdom of local communities with university-based research and training to overcome the achievement gap and engage youth all day and all year.

By providing the structure and support so often lacking in their lives, PEAR engages young people to help give them opportunities many of us take for granted. PEAR's research and practice initiatives include the RALLY Prevention Programs, the New 3 R's of Afterschool, and other projects and tools that help innovate the field in Greater Boston and nationally. These programs interweave school time, academic learning, and mental health support with afterschool experiences to strengthen young people and provide them with positive alternatives so that they may learn, dream and thrive.
